lacks the temperament needed to govern. The outcome of the first of three presidential debates held little promise for President George Bush's re-election, the surveys showed. Mr. Bush was judged by the public to have made the least impres-sive showing, well behind that of Gover-nor Bill Clinton, the Democratic nominee.

The depth of Mr. Bush's problem was reflected in a 50-state survey released Monday by The Associated Press. The poll found that at this point the president was able to count on carrying only two states, 1. s. e. Utah and Nebraska. It showed that Mr. Clinton was "in command" in enough states to give him 200 of the 270 electoral votes needed for victory.

"If anything, the three-man encounter in Clayton, Missouri, focused greater attention on the remaining debates. The three vice-presidential candidates meet Tuesday in Atlanta. The presidential candidates debate again on Thursday in Richmond, Virginia, and on Monday in East Lansing, Michigan.

On Sunday, the candidates stressed fa-miliar themes, Mr. Bush cast himself as the seasoned leader and repeatedly asserted that he would work well with a new Congress. The president labeled Mr. Clinton a "tax and spend" Democrat and argued that his rivals were painting the nation's problems too darkly.

Mr. Bush unexpectedly said he would name James A. Baker 3d to oversee domestic policy in a second term. White House aides said privately that a wholesale cabinet shake-up was likely if Mr. Bush the presidential race last summer, a decision

The audience had barely settled in its chairs when Mr. Clinton turned toward Mr. Bush to confront over "trickle-down economics" and the need for change in the country. "Tonight I say to the president," Mr. Clinton said, looking directly at the incumbent, "Mr. Bush, for 12 years, you've had it your way. You've had your chance and it didn't work. It's time to change. I want to bring the change to the American people but we must all decide first we have the courage to change for hope

With 600 Children Dead, Sarajevo Seems Too Numb Even to Mourn

By John F. Burns New York Thes Service

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina - Samra Kapetanovic lay dead in the Sagrdjia mosque, a girl of 16 who went looking for her hitle sister when the shells started falling and ran into a mortar instead.

Beside her, in the darkness of the mosque's basement, were a boy, 10, and a girl, 5, who died in the same flash of high explosives.

The death of three children in the lunchtime blast Saturday on Dvarska Street, and the wounds suffered by 10 other children, including three amputations, made the front page of Oslobodjenje, the city's principal newspaper.

More than 600 children have been killed in the six-month siege, and nearly 800 are listed as missing and are likely to be dead. People seem hardly able to react anymore when still more through when another visitor explained that he, children die.

The young man knocking on the door of the main city morgue at midafternoon was perhaps not typical, since his purpose in walking several miles through streets solden with driving rain was to see if his mother was in any of the morgues

She had failed to come home three days earlierafter going out to buy bread. When somebody produced a flashlight and played it over the faces of the dead, it became clear that the woman was not at the morgue, and the young man was relieved.

But the bitterness of his experience showed

"Why do you bother?" the man said. in a reaction increasingly common among the 400,000 people trapped by the siege. "Do you think the world really cares?"

The reaction is one of a population numbed by what they have endured, and by the conclusion, after months of hoping that outside pow-ers would intervene to halt the killing and destruction, that the hope is finally lost.

At midsummer, a foreign reporter could hardly pause on a street corner without having a stranger approach to ask about the likelihood of U.S. intervencion.

In the 24 hours that followed the death of stunned survivors at the scene, not at Kosevo Hospital where the surviving children were taken, nor up the stairs off Dvarska Street where Fajko and Izeta Kapetanovic, Samra's parents. struggled with bereavement -- nobody spoke of outside help.

Instead, everywhere there was bitterness and desperation, coupled with the sense that whatever lay ahead, Sarajevo would have to face it alone

"We know that we must fight this by ourserves," said Samir Kapetanovic, the dead girl's brother, 19, on furlough from a Bosnian Army Intel

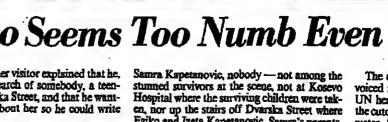

"But tell me this. Why won't you at least lift the arms embargo, so that we have the means of defending ourselves? Or do you want us to end up fighting with our bare hands?"

The call for an end to the arms embargo is voiced more often even than the pleas for the UN headquarters here to do something about the cutoff of electricity and virtually all running water. Serbs who are besieging the city have promised to help restore power and water, but UN commanders said Serbian forces had found one way after another to block repairs.

The attack in which Samra died provided a study in how degraded the most basic services have become. With most of the ambulances destroyed, the wounded children had to wait while some of the few private cars still running were flagged down.

New York Times Service BONN - While much of the world watches Germany, many Germans are busy watching the ascent of Wolfgang Schauhle, heir-apparent to Chancellor Heimut Kohl.

Mr. Kohl is steadily losing popularity, and many commentators believe Mr. Schäuble is preparing to replace him. Although the two have been friends and colleagues for years, recent headlines have strained their relationship.

"Will He Overthrow Kohl?" demanded the mass-circulation Bild in a front-page banner the other day. "Chancellor Schäuble, Take Over!" urged the magazine Super Illu.

Speaking recently, Mr. Schauble refused to be drawn into discussion about his political plans. Asked about articles that portray him as an emerging rival to Mr. Kohl, he smiled, and replied: "I don't even take the time to deny them any more."

But according to press accounts, the chancellor has not been pleased by suggestions that his longfaithful protege is hatching political plots. At a meeting of government leaders last month, he reportedly confronted Mr. Schauble and won a renewed pledge of loyalty.

Mr. Schäuble is no radical, and a government under his leadership would probably pursue policies similar to those Mr. Kohl favors. Recent opinion surveys show him to be Germany's most popular politician, favored to be the next chancelfor over both Mr. Kohl and Björn Engholm, leader of the opposition Social Democrats.

clined to be interviewed about Mr. Schäuble, But speaking off the record, they agreed that he was highly intelligent and also capable of coldness, arrogance and cynicism.

A government official who bas worked with him for years said: "Because of his health, he knows that if he wants to be chancellor, he has to move relatively soon. But the people who would have to make him chancellor are not ready to give up on Kohl right now. That is his problem.

If Mr. Schäuble has another problem, it is the rise of a second ambitious Christian Democrat, Volker Rühe, the new minister of defense, Each man celebrated his 50th birthday last month, and rumor-mongers in Bonn are divided about which of the two would become chancellor if Mr. Kohl's government were to fall and be replaced by a "grand coalition" between the Christian Democrats and the opposition Social Democrats. At his office beside the Rhine, casually dressed in a sweater and open-necked shirt. Mr. Schäuble discussed a variety of political issues. A convinced Europeanist, he is troubled by recent setbacks on the path toward European unity.

"It's worrisome, especially when you see how powerless Europe has been to stop the war in 'ugoslavia," he said. "If unity doesn't work out, it will be a truly historic mistake. We have to make it clearer to people that close European cooperation is not going to mean the loss of national cultures or identities presidential elections, incomplete official results showed Monday. In a runoff ballot on Sunday, Mr. Iliescu, 62, a former aide to the late Stalinist dictator, Nicolae Ceansescu, won 56 percent of the vote, well ahead of Emil Constantinescu, who had 42 percent, the central electoral authority said. The final official result is not expected before Tuesday. The figure was based on an incomplete tally, with ballots from almost half of the polling stations counted. An election monitoring group, Pro-Democracy, also said Mr. Iliescu had won, garnering almost two-thirds of the vote. Its tabulation was based on an independent parallel count.

BERLIN (UPI) - Thieves have stolen eight paintings worth more than $40 million from the Palace Museum in Weimar in the biggest German art heist since World War II, the police said Monday.

This level of popularity is considered especially impressive because of Mr. Schäuble's physical condition. Since being shot by a deranged assailant at a campaign rally in October 1990, he has used a wheelchair and expects to do so for the rest of his life. He said that although the experience of life in a wheelchair had made him a bit slower, it had also made him more patient.

Mr. Schäuble, who was born in the Black Forest town of Freiburg, became active in Christian Democratic youth groups while sull a student.

After winning election to parliament in 1972, when he was 30, he became a favorite of Mr. Kohl's. Their friendship continued after Mr. Kohl's election as chancellor, with Mr. Schäuble rising to interior minister.

Mr. Schäuhle's greatest strength in the contest to succeed Mr. Kohl may be his ability to work with opposition parties. He has good relations with members of parliament from all major parties, and consults them regularly when planning legislative strategy.

Mr. Schäuble scoffed at fears that a strong European Community would be a platform for the expansion of German power. "The opposite is true," he asserted. "Anyone who fears Germany should be strongly in favor of European integration."

Like many German politicians, Mr. Schäuble is alarmed by the wave of anti-foreigner violence that has spread through Germany. He predicted, how-ever, that the violence would be brought under control.

"Changes in the law are necessary because there are organized groups of people in countries like Romania who are bringing thousands of illegal immigrants over our borders with the promise that they can live here at government expense," be said. "Once those people start showing up hack at home, a week after they leave, they won't keep coming in such numbers.

"Our police also have a lot to learn. In the past, we taught them to be gentle with protesters, but that was in the days when protesters were mostly kids demonstrating against nuclear power. This is something very different. People involved in these attacks belong behind bars."

WASHINGTON - President

dates may have discussed serious matters on stage at Washington University, but off stage, the level of discourse was deeply, awesomely petty.

Up until shortly before the candidates walked out to their lecterns, President George Bush's backers were still arguing about how he and his rivals should be introduced. Since there were three debaters and two doors, the organizers wanted the candidates to be prepositioned on stage before the event began. But the Bush camp wanted the president to be ancounced and to walk in from the wings while the cameras were rolling and after his two challengers were in place.

Finally, a coin was flipped. Governor Bill Clinton, who was more worried about a hoarse voice than a grand entrance, won. The debate began with the three candidates already in place.

Perhaps it was simply that, in subliminal terms, the debate was clearly a case of two against one (or maybe it was the fact that he chose to cat a plate of chili maca-roni for lunch on Air Force One), but all night Mr. Bush seemed at least a little defensive, and Mr. Clinton and Ross Perol at least a bit cocky.

Time after time, the rounds went like this: Mr. Perot, all attitude and aphorisms, would snap off 60 seconds of near-perfect sound bites. Mr. Clinton, who is always at his best at night, would whip off a couple of bundred words of change-and-promise speech chunks.

When it came to Mr. Bush's turn, be would almost invariably begin on the defensive, with a word like "Well," or "Now," and continuing in that vein. The phrases that occurred most regu-larly in his answers were ones that sought to persuade that, under Mr. Bush, things had not really been so bad as all that: "We're doing a little better," "We're making some progress there," and "We're still in the fight."

The ending of the night underscored this feeling. At the formal conclusion of the debate, all three men stayed on stage to shake hands with each other and with the panel of reporters.

stage to go meet and greet his family members and friends in the right front rows of the audience. As he was doing that, the Clinton and Perot families swarmed oustage in a friendly embrace that resembled a cocktail party, with Mr. Perot hugging the governor's daughter. Chelsea, (who was on crutches, because of a dancing injury) and Hillary Clinton chatting happily with Margot Perot.

Judging by the applause and laughs in the hall, Mr. Perot was the clear winner for sheer entertainment value.

The audience loved his Washington bashing. They laughed when he said that, if he battled the behemoth of the bureaucracy, first off, "everyone in Washington would faint because they have never seen anything happen in that town."

And he trashed the "alligatorshoe crowd" of lobbyists and influence peddlers, promising that if he took over they "would wind up in the Smithsonian."

It was one more example of the Clinton campaign's policy of quick response that they began their post-debate spin 10 minutes before the debate ended.

Less than a month from Election Day, the Democrat, who is the Cook County recorder of deeds, remains a strong favorite to defeat the Republican Richard Williamson, a former Reagan administration official.

But cracks are beginning to show in the Braun mystique, and analysts in both parties no longer think it impossible that Mr. Williamsoo could pull off an upset.

The immediate cause of the storm clouds was the disclosure by WMAQ-TV here last week of how Mrs. Braun handled a $28,750 royalty payment to her mother, Edna Moseley, 71, a nursing home resident whose care is being paid for by Medicaid. The money, from the sale of timber on land partially owned by Mrs. Moseley, was deposited in Mrs. Braun's money-market account, and some of it was disbursed to her sister and brother. But oo taxes were paid on it, for was it reported to Illinois Medicaid officials as required by law to determine whether any of it should be used to offset oursing home

Short, Happy Political Life of Lona Guerrero

SAN ANTONIO, Texas - Lena Guerrero started in politics young and put the dusty poverty of South Texas behind her quickly. After she addressed the Democratic National Convention in July her backers said this young, talented Hispanie woman could go to the top — governor, senator, even president. Nobody is making those predictions anymore. On Sept. 24, after nearly two weeks of disclosures and admissions, Ms. Guerrero, 34, resigned her post as chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission and apologized for falsifying her resume by claiming a college degree she never earned.

Although Ms. Guerrero continues to seek a full term on the railroad commission, the episode has clearly wounded her career. She is now the subject of more jokes than adulation. (NYT)

Herald Tribune. The Debate, Round One: Bush Loses by Failing to Win

WASHINGTON — "You have attacked my patriotism." counterpunched Bill Clinton, in the most dramatic moment of the first presidential debate of 1992. George Bush had carefully said that Mr. Clinton's organizing anti-war demonstrations abroad as a youth was "a question of character and judgment." and claimed not to be impugning his patriotism.

On Thorsday, when the presidential candidates return to action in Richmond, Virginia, they will be questioned by members of an audience of uncommitted voters. Judging by what I saw Sunday, when The Washington Post assembled a similar group of 11 uncommitted voters in Cleveland to watch the first debate, these are the very people most likely to be sympathetic to Mr. Perot. What came across to the Clevelanders was the irreverent humor, prickly independence and the promise of strong action that Mr. Perot projected, Their descriptions of him included words like "caring," "en-tertaining" and "sincere." But what set him apart from the major-party nominees was the sense that Mr.

Perot would "face the issues" as a 'results-oriented" executive. Mr. Perot's appeal was heightened by the contrast to the impression left by Mr. Busb and Mr. Clinneighboring Turkey. Turkey's underdeveloped southeastern region is home to another 8 million Kurds, of an estimated 11 million spread through Turkey as a whole. It is also the site of a now eight-year-old guerrilla conflict with a fringe terrorist group, called the PKK or Kurdish Workers Party, which seeks an independent Kordish state. That conflict has slowly escalated despite long-standing efforts by the Ankara government to suppress it, and last month it claimed 700 lives. Why the stubborn escalation - especially in light of much evidence over the years that most Turkish Kurds do not support the aim of a separate state? One likely factor is the wider Tarkish situation. Kurds make up an estimated 20 percent of the Turkish population, but until recently were barred from using their language or exercising even the most elementary of cultural rights; in 1990, the speaking of Kurdish in the bome was decriminalized. N EW DELHI - For over a year, India's government has been pressed to make bold changes on two

Mr. Rao cannot afford to move dramatically on both fronts at once.

His preference for bberalization is based on the belief that it is more important for India's future, and on the calculation that the risk of nuclear war with Pakistan is rather small.

The best hope for movement on both issues is for a centrist leader to continue holding power in New Del-hi. Mr. Rao has a reasonable chance with the right against him.

for cynicism was his attempt to claim credit for civil rights legislation that he stubboraly opposed until his em-barrassment over the Clarence Thomas hearings forced him to sign the bill.

The Thomas nomination was the subject of a remarkable comment by Ross Perot. He said an "all-time low in this country" was the confrontation between Judge Thomas and Anita Hill in the confirmation bearings, and the P. senators on the committee "should hang their heads in shame." He evidently meant the Republican senators who attacked Professor Hill.

Mr. Perot was altogether a plus in the debate. He was folksy, and he was effective. He kept bringing an air of reality to lofty discussions. "..." "We are sitting on a ticking bomb, folks," he said of the country's financial situation. That won applanse from the audience at Washington University, St. Louis, and I imagina it scored with the television audience ---for a simple reason. Il was true,"

If a debating judge were scoring this one, I think be would make Mr. Perot the winner. Even someone with knowledge of his darker side -- his paranoid investigations of "encinies" and the rest -- cheered his direct statement about racial divisions: "If you hate people, I don't want your vote."

But voters may get a kick out of Ross Perot and not vote for him for president. Moreover, his brutally effective criticism of American policy over the last dozen years - the policy that has led the country to economic disaster — is likely to hurt Mr. Bush and help Mr. Clinton.

President Bush got nowhere in his efforts to shed his image of econom-ic ineptitude. "There's some fairly good news out there," he said flabbi-ly. He was defensive and whiny rather than presidential. Mr. Clinton seemed in charge: careful, fair, controlled. And in the end he defined the real choice: "the choice between hope and fear." The New York Times.

Columbus Then and Now

Michelangelo was a teenager when Co-lumbus sailed west. Leonardo da Vinci was 40, lt was a long time ago. A different time. And that is a point to remember 500 years after the great explorer's first landing in the Americas. There were some 60 million people living in Europe in 1492, emerging from medieval bopelessness into a period of renaissance. Indeed, the excitement of finding a "new world" helped hasten Europe's rebirth and led, of course, to further discovery and expansion.

People had known for at least two centuries that the world was not flat, but they still believed that it was the center of the universe: it would be another 50 years before Copernicus advanced his notion that planets revolve around the sun.

Undiscovered, across the Atlantic, were another 40 million people whose ancestors had settled in the Americas thousands of years earlier: the Maya civilization in Central America, the Incas to the south, and many nations with many hundreds of tribes to the north. Columbus, landing somewhere in the Caribbean, called them Indians, believing he had reached the Indies off Asia.

Even today, Native Americans are commonly considered to have been one people. They were not. Some were warriors, others peaceful. Some denied their women equal standing with men; others had wom-en as chiefs. They spoke languages as different as Swedish and Swahili.

By now it is no secret that Columbus and those who came after him abused the nafives, drove them from their land and introduced European diseases that decimated their population. While this point has been raised and repeated through the better part' of five centuries, it has perhaps never been so widely recognized as now.

The 100-year contrast in attitudes makes the point: In 1892, one orator declared that "unnumbered millions who enjoy in their liberties and their happiness the fruits of [Columbus's] faith will reverently guard and preserve, from century to century, his name and fame." On Monday, in New York City, Spain officially commemorated the Sooth anniversary by observing a "Day of-Respect for Native American Cultures." Yet it is as unfair to burden Columbus, with all the depredations that followed his voyage as it is to credit him alone with the development of the Western Hemisphere. It is enough that a long and different time ago, he opened the way. -THE NEW YORK TIMES.

By William Pfaff

PARIS -On Monday, the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus's landfall in the Americas, the United States government began an im-mense project of scanning the radio waves of the universe to discover if another world of intelligent beings exists out there.

Columbus was not looking for a new humanity or a new continent, but for a new trade route to India, and he found America only in the sense that Europeans generally were unaware of the existence of the American continent. (They generally recog-nized it to be such only after Columbus's death.)

Having found this new world, the Spanish and Portuguese, and later the French and English, explored and exploited it in the delight of new knowledge and the wish to enrich themselves, but they also colonized and evangelized its people in the belief that they were saving the souls of individuals who would otherwise be lost to heavenly redemption.

In both respects they acted out of confidence in themselves and in their beliefs and values. They debated whether they had found an innocent world, conceivably the original Eden, or one whose native people were their natural inferiors and therefore their legitimate slaves. But they had no doubt that what they found and what they did would fit into the moral cosmology of Enropean Christian civilization. The modern search of the cosmos for intelligent life makes the opposite assumption. It is nearly always motivated by a notion that extraterrestial life will prove more "advanced" than earthly life, and may supply us with solutions to problems we are unable to solve ourselves - if it does not colonize and rule us, which would be another kind of solution,

The secularized religious impulse in this is obvious. People unable or unwilling to believe in the traditional God of the Western monotheistic religions are ready to believe in scientific salvation, supplied from outer space by byperintelligent extraterrestials - by angels wearing laboratory jackets.

One never hears a supporter of the search for extraternestial life justify its costs as giving us the opportunity to colonize the civilizations we might find out there — or to convey to them our knowledge and values, in order to lift them up. That would decidedly be politically incorrect. We are very differ-ent from the European civilization which discovered America. It had no doubts about its superiority to whatever it would encounter in alien worlds.

Our own doubt is equally evident in the revisionist judgments on Columbus that have sourced the observance of this anniversary. He has, by many, been turned into a figure of aggression and genocide. The larger argument made is that the Western tradition itself is oppressive, and that Columbus, its agent, was a willing accomplice in a criminal affair.

It is possible to believe this only if one totally lacks historical imagination, or acquaintance with 15th century European assumptions. It judges Columbus by an anachronistic 20th century American political standard, itself narrower, and more naive, than the standards of Columbus's time. It commits the elementary error of deriving intentions from results, as if Columbus and his contemporaries were capable of imagining the titanic consequences of their actions. Il ignores the ideas evoked in Spain and elsewhere in Europe -- and in Columbus's own mind -- by the discoveries made in America. In 1976, as part of the bicentennial observance of the United States, the Cleveland Muscum and the National Gallery in Washington organized an exposition on European views of American discovery and development. The authors of the catalogue write that "the terms used by Columbus to describe the islands he discovered recalled those used by the Latin poets" to describe mythical islands "where there was eternal springtime and men lived in a Golden Age." Amerigo Vespucci wrote of the "Indians" he en-countered as "naked, beautiful, elegant." "None pos-Such descriptions seemed fulfiliment of classical literature's descriptions of the Golden Age. But slavery was part of what followed. Self-right eousness today has shallow roots to justify it. Less than 200 years ago in the United States, the slave-holding Thomas Jefferson tormentedly debated whether Africans were wholly human.

The encounter between Europeans and native inhabitants of America would in any case have happened, with identical consequences for the Indian civilizations, had Columbus never existed. The exploratory spirit animating 15th century Europe and the new maritime technologies developed by the Portuguese and Spanish made America's "discov-ery" inevitable. What followed was a collision of civilizations, with victory to the one which was technologically and intellectually advanced, possessing total confidence in its beliefs and its destiny.

It was a confidence which Americans today lack. If it were not lacking there would be no controversy over the Columbus quincentenary. But perhaps there would also be no nationally funded $100 million effort to communicate with extraterrestials, as if they could tell us what we need to know.

Patriotism Abroad

In attacking Governor Bill Clin ton's patriotism for demonstrating "on foreign soil" against the Viet-nam War, President George Bush undermines the constitutional guarantee of free speech for Americans wherever they live. Would he discufranchise those who live abroad? ansa has said that it planned to divert most of its resources to its core airline business.

In the global airline arena, the stakes are high. Some aviation experts reckon that fewer than two dozen airlines will attain the critical mass to survive as global carriers in the year 2000, and both Lufthansa and Air France aspire to membership in the select group of emerging megacarriers.

In terms of international passengers carried, Lufthansa and Air France were the world's 'second- and fourth-largest airlines in 1991, according to data from the International Air Transport Association. British Airways was the 'largest and American Airlines third-largest.

Despite their high standing in international competition, the German and French giants risk slipping in the rankings if they fail to match American carriers' terms on increasingly competitive North Atlantic routes.

"Each man for himself becomes the rule when market forces spin out of control," the president of Air France, Bernard Attali, told a recent IATA symposium, referring to cutthroat North Atlantic competition that has slashed profits.

"We are now witnessing the headlong rush of the fare war," he added. "In an attempt to fill scats they can't sell, the most feverish, or voracious carriers are practically giving them away, pushing prices throughout the entire sector into a downward spiral."

What is a bargain for passengers often is a headache for airlines. Luthansa claims that some U.S. air carriers charge prices that are even below their own fuel costs on North Atlantic flights.

Most recently, cargo rates over the North Atlantic have been slashed by up to half and no longer correspond even vaguely to costs, Mr. Attali said. Air France is particularly critical of the fact that two of its direct U.S. competitors are in bankruptcy proceedings, meaning their only concern is to generate cash.

Lufthansa, according to a company official, faces a choice "between the plague and chol-

"If we match the prices," the official said, "we fill our planes but fly with a loss. If we don't match the prices, we lose passengers and fly with a loss."

Both airlines' complaints center on postwar bilateral pacts that limit the number of North in Europe. Five - soon to be six - U.S. carriers are in direct competition with Air France, and eight compete with Lufthansa. Britain, by contrast, allows only two U.S. carriers to fly to London. Paris recently responded to state-owned Air France's complaints and renounced a longstanding avation pact with the United States that critics said unfairly discriminated against the French carrier. Bonn is weighing a similar move long urged by Lufthansa, which is SI percent state-owned.

To be sure, not all of the two airlines' woes are imported, or even unique. The industry as a whole lost $2.7 billion in 1990, $4 billion last year, and is expected to lose another $2 billion this year, largely because of overly optimistic expansion.

But the German and French airlines suffer the particular burden of some of the world's highest costs. Lufthansa said its personnel costs total 32.4 percent of revenues, compared with 33.1 percent at Air France and 24.7 percent at British Airways, which was recently privatized and turns a profit.

SEVILLE, Spain - Organized as the central event of Spain's A celebration of the Columbus quincentenary, the World's Fair in Seville ended Monday much as it began six months ago - with barely a word of thanks to the man who made the entire $2.2 billion extravaganza possible.

Poor Columbus! He was the excuse for what was proclaimed as "the Year of Spain, a year that included the Barcelona Olympics as well as the world's rair, Expo >2 but in the cast at was an inwanted guest, an embarrassing reminder of a great adventure that -turned rapidly into a bloody conquest. So Monday, on the anniversary of his feat, he was largely ignored well as the World's Fair, Expo '92. But in the end he was an schere. It was deemed safer to avoid the villain-versus-hero debate raging in the New World. Even the discovery became "the meeting of two peoples." Whatever his merits, Spain concluded, Columbus should not be allowed to spoil the party.

Expo's real purpose, after all, was more topical - to demonstrate that Spain has turned its back on a different "dark past" - on the backwardness and isolation brought by General Franco's dictator-ship during the middle years of this century — and is now a modern and prosperous European democracy.

And that was the theme chosen by Prime Minister Felipe Gonzá-lez when he addressed a huge crowd, including King Juan Carlos I and Queen Sofia, during the first of two closing ceremonies at the vast Expo site on the Island of Cartuja in the Guadalquivir River abeside Seville.

"The image of Spain is today more respected." ne satu-No less important, Mr. González went on, the success of the "World's Fair "has enabled us to prove to ourselves that we are like this as well as anyone else" capable of organizing an event like this as well as anyone else because, he added, ever the improvisers, Spaniards have spent a long time "not believing in ourselves."

As a native son of Seville, Mr. González had double reason to be proud. To prepare for Expo, $10 billion was also spent on a high-speed railroad from Madrid, a new airport and eight bridges in Seville and highways throughout Andalusia, all aimed at integrating the long-neglected south min the rest of Spain.

Dedicated to "The Age of Discoveries," the show began on April 20 this year with 110 countries, 27 international organizations and a score of companies represented, 98 pavilions crowded with everyartists contracted to bring music, dance and theater.

*. In the end, though, it was understood that Expo's success would be measured by attendance. And, by late July, past the half-way stage, its organizers were close to panic as press criticism began in mount. The worst of the summer heat was about to strangle Seville and the expected masses of tourists had not yet showed up.

- But then, inexplicably, the rhythm suddenly changed. After re-ceiving only 5.2 million visits in July, Expo recorded 8.1 million in Angust and 10.9 million in September. And if the smallest crowd comprised 110,000 people one early time day, all records were broken on Oct. 3 when 629,000 people crowded the fair,

The final count enabled officials to claim success. The number of different visitors -- 16 million -- fell short of the target of 18 million but, allowing for those who spent more than one day at Expo, the number of visits -42 million - surpassed the hoped-for total of 36 million.

Of the visitors, two-thirds were Spaniards, but there were also 1 inilion French, 900,000 Portuguese, 300,000 Italians and, unexpectedly, 280,000 Americans. Then there were the dignitaries: 77 heads of state or government and 44 members of royal families turned up. Among pavilions competiting fiercely to draw crowds, those of Canada, Spain, Fujitsu, Monaco, Australia, the Vatican and one theme pavilion dedicated to navigation were the acknowledged winners. In these cases, though, the patience of crowds was sorely tested: the record wait was seven hours to see two movies in ¢. ₿ Canada's pavilion.

Ramos Now Says GIs Can Stay On

Policy Shift Is Expected to Provoke Foes Who Want All Americans Out

By Philip Shenon New York Times Service

MANILA - President Fidel V. Ramos of the Philippines said Monday that he was willing to accept the stationing of American troops in the Philippines even after the United States withdraws from its last major military base here. The president's remarks, made in an interview, mean that the American military presence in the Philippines will not necessarily end next month, when the U.S. Navy is scheduled in lower the flag for a final time over the huge American naval base at Subic Bay, The Philippine Senate voted last year to force the United States out of the base. "What would be good for the Philippines is a continuation of the friendship - and of the mutual security arrangement — with the United States," Mr. Ramos said in his bluntest and most detailed comments to date on the future of military ties with the United States. "We'd like to find a way to make that mntually agreeable to both governments, if that is part of what the U.S. wants."

The Bush administration has said it would like to retain a military presence in the Philippines, and Mr. Ramos, a former get neral is a longtime supporter of an Amer-ican military presence here. But his remarks are bound to anger political opponents who believe that the armed forces of the United States, which colonized the Philippines 94 years ago, must leave here once and for all. American officials said they were not at all sure that Mr. Ramos could win approval from the Philippine Congress for a continued American military presence here. But he appeared confident that a new military accord with the United States would not face the wave of nationalist sentiment that caused the Philippine Senate to re-ject a 1991 treaty renewing the American leases on Subic Bay Naval Station, Clark Air Base and several small installations in the Philippines, "The issue is fading away as among the top issues of our peo-ple," he said. "I'm not too worried about the political flak."

Mr. Ramos said the Philippines was willing to accept an arrange-ment like that worked out last year between the Bush administration and Singapore. Although the United States does not have a base in Singapore, it does maintain military offices there, and American ment.

battleships and military planes routinely visit Singapore for maintenance and refueling. "I think the United States would like something like what they've got in Singapore, which is an arrangement so that U.S. sircraft and U.S. vessels with U.S. personnel vessels with U.S. personnel can be serviced by a host government," he said Asked bow many American troops might be stationed in the Philippines, Mr. Ramos replied, "At this point, it's premature to be talking about numbers."

Mr. Ramos also did not say where American troops might be based in the Philippines, although he suggested that American military "consultants" might be useful at Subic Bay after it is returned to the Philippine authorities. The navy returned much of the Subic Bay base to the Philippine government last month. It is scheduled to lower the American flag and withdraw the last of its sailors on Nov. 24. Clark was abandoned in 1991 after the devastating erup-tion of a nearby volcano, Mount Pinatuho

Mr. Ramos said he was concerned that the United States secred in be turning inward and giving up some of its influence in foreign affairs, especially as mea-sured in its willingness to assist developing nations.

"There are great indications of the U.S. reduction of its global concerns as far as aid and development are concerned," he said, noting the recent sharp cuts in American aid to Manila, which fell from about $500 million last year to $200 million this year. As a result, he said, the Philippines may draw that much closer to its Asian neighbors.

"If that is where most of our economic partners, where most of our markets are going to be, I guess we'll just have to turn in that direc-tion," be said. "That's why we're saying to the U.S., please don't let this so-called special relationship between our two countries die."

Informal Quest Finds U.S. Campaign Humor a Dying Art

dential candidates' expense. Not the homogenized sort rooted in the balanced nightly monologues of television bumor. No, something mean and lopsided of the sort Jona-than Swift or Lenny Bruce might have applied to the vastly promis-ing material of the 1992 campaign - all the evasions, squeaks and wheezes of its chief actors.

"You got your Dan Quayle, your Murphy Brown, the not inhaling, Gennifer Flowers — these are all dead horses that none of the club comics want to flog," Chris Drake, proprietor of The Funny Bone in Pittsburgh, said apologetically. The club is one of thousands dotting the land where, profession-al comits and booking agents on dotting the land where, protession-al comics and booking agents on this tight circuit say, there is no room for political jokes this year. "The recession has hit our busi-ness, too," said Chris Cipa, one of the comics. "Politics is risky. Most people come to the clubs and pay $20 or so to forget their trouble not to have a lecture jammed down their throat. A Clinton joke will get a stare, not a laugh, ever since he became the front runner and got respect. And Al Gore is just not funny - the least funny person in vears. A recent night's fare of three stand-up contedians at The Funny Bone might have had Willy Loman in the aisles grimacing: hair-loss jokes, relationship jokes, anti-ho-mosexual wisecracks, panhandling jokes, condom jokes, airline jokes, gynecology jokes. Yet they got lots of laughs from a mixed crowd that stepped in from the surrounding shopping mall, a youngish group that seemed sadly preoccupied with tomance and mortality. Which is all the more reason to appreciate a stand-up exception to the pathetic rule, Randy Credico.

He is a comic who can name and mock a dozen now-forgotten friendly dictators of Latin America, a politics addict who would rather joke about the S&Ls than S&M

He is so fed up with the apolitical state of affairs in the clobs that he has rebelled and lately gathers a few brave political satirists every Thursday night on Manhattan's children.

West Side for some bootleg, thor-oughly imbalanced trashing of current politics. In a basement hideaway at the West Gate Café, working beneath a club booming with Columbia University students whose general taste in humor he abhors, Mr. Credico only starts with the unfuminess of Mr. Gore, postulating that he was chosen for the ticket as "the only man whiter than Clinton" in a strategy of going for the Jefferson Davis vote, a reference to the Confederate hero.

"A Clinton-Gore button -- radi-cal step these days, right?" he asked. "You know, like Fidel-Che?"

On a recent Thursday, the laugh-ter seemed cased by a sense of relief that it could be so easy to mock, publicly and quite unfairly, such assorted targets as Senator Al-phonse M. D'Amato's ethics, Sena-tor Edward M. Kennedy's obliviousness, the parallel vanities of Henry A. Kissinger and William Kunstler, Patrick J. Buchanan's socret campaign for the German elec-tions of 1996, radical feminism's-woodenness, and the pro-choice lobby's insensitivity toward the Christian evangelical tobacco lobby's need for fresh smokers.

As an average feminist, Lizz Winstead convulsed the place in pleading guilty to the anti-abortion lobby's suspicions about her: True, that's all we have on our mind. I get up and say, Well, I've got to go to breakfast, have an abortion, go to the sauna, have an abortion, wax my car, have an abortion ....

John Stewart was worthy of Swift in positing a scene out of the fact that the United States might be 15th in the world in child education but first in weapons technology: "In the next war the bombs will be way too smart and valuable. We'll just have to drop illiterate school-

Ross Perot at the debate. He would use the White house as a "bully pulpit."

What the Candidates Had to Say

Following are excerpts from the debate between George Bush, Bill Clinton and Ross Perot in St. Louis Missouri:

• Mr. Perot on his lack of experience for presi-dent: "Well, they've got a point. I don't have any experience in running up a $4 trillion debt."

. The jug-cared Mr. Perot on the need to cut the deficit: "We've got to clean this mess up, leave this country in good shape, and pass on the American dream to them. We've got to collect the taxes to do it. If there's a fairer way, I'm all ears - aah."

• Mr. Bush, reacting to Mr. Clinton's statement that international markets reacted poorly to the possibility of a second Bush term: "Governor Clinton, he talks about the reaction to the markets. There was a momentary fear that he might win, and the markets went philt, down like that."

. Mr. Perot on the need to heal America's racial divisions: "We are all in this together. We ought to love one another because united teams win and divided teams lose. And if we can't love one another, we ought to get along with one another.

And if you can't get there, just recognize we're all stnck with one another because nobody's going anywhere, night?"

 Mr. Clinton on change in the country: The most important distinction in this campaign is that I represent real hope for change, a departure from trickle-down economics, a departure from taxand-spend economics to invest and grow.

But before I can do that, I must challenge the American people to change and they must decide. Tonight I say to the president, Mr. Bash: For 12 years you've had it your way. You've had your chance and it didn't work. It's time to change.

Mr. Bush on change in the country: Well, I think one thing that distinguishes is experience. I think we've dramatically changed the world. I'll talk about that a little bit later, but the changes are mind-bogging for world peace. Kids go to bed at night without the same fear of nuclear war.

And change for change's sake isn't enough. We saw that message in the late '70s. We heard a lot about change. And what happened? The misery index went right through the roof. But my econom-ic program I think is the kind of change we want.

All three men appeared relaxed and confident. ## LONDON FASHION

Is British DesignWorld Europhobic?

By Suzy Menkes International Herald Tribune

ONDON - Will Europe ever be in fashion in England? Io the week of the European summit, a furious dispute has broken out about national identity. Should a British fashion award go to a Turkish-born designer, educat-ed in England, who shows his clothes in Italy and sells them all over the world?

Rifat Ozbek was voted — by a huge major-ity — designer of the year in an awards ceremony Monday that was the climax of the Londoo fashion season. His controversial nomination --- although no one disputes that his Milan show last week was an unqualified success — follows hot on the high heels of another British fashion drama. Norma Major, the wife of the prime minister, was spotted shopping for a suit at Escada - the German company with an Italian name with shops in all major European cities.

Here is the Europhobia of the British in microcosm. Although it is elementary that for a fashion company to succeed in the 1990s it has to take the world stage, when English designers finally get international status, they are accused of being unpatriotic. The so-called "defectors" are Ozbek, plus Katharine Hammett John Galliano and Vivienne Westwood, who will all oow show in Paris.

What is wrong — but also what is original and different — with British fashion. The center-piece of the three-day showings was a tent village in King's Road Chelsea, containing exhibition stands of accessories and clothing with a high standard of design and especially cocktail and evening wear," said Kose Marie Bravo, president of Saks Fifth Avenue, one of the few American stores fielding a big buying team. The London season had three stand-out

fashion shows: from Jean Muir, a superb craftswoman at the summit of her skills; a debut line with a fresh spirit from 23 year-old Nicholas Knightly, a former assistant of Westwood, and a strong. collection from John Richmond, who after 10 years in busi-ness has broken away from his clubland

All three shows had in common a focus on incisive cutting that takes British fashion back to its roots before the swinging 1960s aprooted the tradition.

Significantly, London fashion left well alone the hipple revival that swamped Milan — apart from Ghost, which showed soft, flowing clothes and did them well.

"I look in London for strong, bold modern design — and more playful clothes than in Milan," said Charivari's Barbara Weiser, who called Ghost the "perfect summer uni-form." She also praised Helen Storey, whose soft clothes with a hard edge of leather in-cluded dresses inspired by 1930s styles.

ONG and soft was London's fashion message. Muir, who made silky jersey dresses her signature, sent out a perfectly judged collec-tion, opening with pastel pantsuits: waterfall jackets that flowed over the body above over-the-knee skirts or midcalf culottes.

Wide, soft shorts were the briefer alternative and pajama pants in floating printed chilfons a fresh evening look. Muir's apparently simple dresses (and dresses are a hot fashion item) are intricately pieced together and, like all her clothes, fall gently across the body without gripping it. It was a very fine

Also going with the flow was Knightly, whose show included bias-cut crepe skirts with inset panels that he said he had studied from the work of Madeleine Vionnet. Knightly's debut collection, which included white pique blouses billowing into romper suits, had a sweet freshness and a hint of the 1930s. "I didn't mind reminding you of the '30s, but I did want it to look modern," said Knightly. Richmond has a famous following in the rock world. Although he showed black leather and apron skirts with peekaboo backs, they were countered with stylish vests and jackets mixing ticking and pinstripes. Rich-mond has an incisive cut, making an clongated silhouette and fitting jackets very close to the body as in the shrunken looks of the 1970s. In the perforated or slit fabrics and in his signature leather, he also has a raw edge of sex and violence that is contemporary.

Jasper Conran withdrew his nomination from the awards because of Ozbek's entry, yet his own line is oow made by Bidermann. and Conran admits that management input by the French company has increased busi-ness to £6 million ($10.2 million) from £2.2 million in two years. Conran showed short curvy jackets with pants or short circle skirts, but his tailoring lacked zest. Things perked up at night when fabrics inative and burnt-out velvet slithwere ima cred across the body in a flame-orange long dress with corset bodice.

Arabella Pollen owes her expansion to investment by Courtailds textiles. She showed trim, slim-line tailoring in both long skirts and short suits, which is a trend. The show was spiced with an African theme silver metal necklets and bones in the hair. The Irish-born Pani Costelloe had a gentle, nostalgic look to his fine linens and quiet colors. His skirts were the longest in town --dropping to near ankle length -- although pantsuits dominated the show. Calf-length shirtwaist dresses in white linen were flashed with red ribbons, an AIDS awareness symbol. ous for being a Princess Di designer, got the best front-row crowd, which included Ivana Trump, in egg. yolk yellow Ungaro, and Alyce Faye, John Cleese's partner. The party cruise up the Nile staged by Cleese this summer had inspired Starzewski's collection, which included safari dresses, cau-de-nil tailoring and a pair of sphinxes at the end of the runway.

OES British fashion travel? There is a sense that designers with international clout get up and go. Galliano, who will show in Paris on Wednesday, is now backed by Fayçal, owner of the French company Piem Sud. Workers for Freedom, a label with an original spirit and clothes made to high standards, will also move to France. Its designers, Graham Fraser and Richard Nott, are moving lock, stock and scissors to the Gascony area. Their spring/summer collection had fluid skirts, shirts and vests in sunny-colored silks, with a shadow-play of dyes or handpainted effects.

The new fashion calendar, advancing the show dates in Paris, creates a dilemma for the British.

"If I had a blank check I would take the London Designer Show and move it to Paris where the buyers are," says Sir Ralph Hal-pern, the chairman of the British Fashion Council

He is looking for new funding for the tented exhibition, organized by Annette Worsley-Taylor, as it will be losing its cur-rent subsidy of £150,000 a year (about $255,000) from the British Clothing Industry Association.

The problem in London is the nickle of buyers, compared with the flood tide in Paris. Many British exhibitors will be moving on to Paris this week, proving that designers can keep their English identity but become good

LONDON — Virgin Atlantic Airways said Monday it had broken off talks with Davies & Newman Holdings PLC for a deal to rescue its Dan-Air airline. But Dan-Air said talks were continuing with an International Herald Tribune SINGAPORE - Despite fears that sluggish economic growth in Japan, the United States and Eu-rope may tip the world into pro-longed recession, Singapore Airlines said Monday that it would press ahead with an ambitious growth strategy that will almost uble the oumber of aircraft in its fleet by the end of the decade. While many airlines are canceling or deferring orders, Singapore Airlines executives said the carrier planned to expand its fleet at an average of around 9 percent annually to the year 2000.

"Based on our projection, by the year 2000 we shall almost double our present fleet to over 90 aircraft," said the airline's deputy managing director for commercial affairs, Michael Tan. Airline executives also indicat-a new generation long-haul pas-senger jet that major manufactur-million) this year.

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches PARIS - Airbus Industrie will cut back its aircraft production over the next three years in response to the sluggish market for new planes, an Airbus spokesman announced Monday.

It was the third time in less than a year that Airbus announced production cuts, confirming, that the European planemaker expects oo early improvement in the pace of orders.

Airbus will produce only 180 aircraft in 1995, compared with the 220 it had been planning to build, the spokesman said. Although that would still be more than the 160 planes it is to build this year, it is 18 percent below its original target.

The company said its monthly production of all aircraft types would fall to 13.8 in 1993, from 14.6

this year, then rise to 15.2 in 1994 and 16.5 in 1995. This compares with its previous plan to build 14.8 aircraft a month in 1993, 18.3 in 1994 and 19.6 in 1995.

The spokesman said the production rate of its new A330/A340 wide-bodied medium- and longhaul passenger jets would be stepped up more slowly than expected, reaching its target level of seven planes per month in the first half of 1996 rather than in late 1995.

The consortium already has announced plans to scale back production of its 150-seat A320 shortrange jet both in 1993 and 1994, building 16 fewer A320s than planned next year and 10 fewer the (Bloomberg, Reuters) following year.

director, Cheong Choong Kong, said that when the recession "fi-nally ends, and it must, those airlines with staying power, that have not retrenched essential resources or canceled re-equipment plans, will be the first off the mark. He said the Asia-Pacific region would remain the major source of growth in air transport for both passengers and cargo in the 1990s, and that Singapore Airlines was well placed to take advantage of this expansion. Mr. Cheong also said that the airline, which is interested in acquiring a 10 to 20 percent stake in Qantas Airways Ltd., would seek "an influence on the strategic thinking" of the Australian airline, but had no interest in its day-to-day management While we wish to be heard, we do not seek control," he said.

Singapore Airlines is a contender along with British Airways and a consortium of Air New Zealand and New Zealand-based Brierly Investments Ltd. for a stake in Qantas, Anstralia's state-owned airline that merged last month with domestic carrier Australian Airlines and is to be privatized soon.

In spite of a weak global econo-my, intense competition and the strong Singapore dollar, Singa-pore Airlines had a profit after tax and minority interests of 928 million Singapore dollars ($580 mil-lion) on revenue of 5.4 billion dollars in the year ended March 31. However, analysts expect a significantly weaker performance because of price cutting on some main routes when the airline reports half-year results in about three weeks.

Sunil Gupta, research manager at Crosby Securities Pte Ltd. forecast a net profit of about 430 million dollars, down from 530 ullion a year earlier.

But he said profit for the full year should strength exceed the 1991-92 performance because additional ca better results in the half.

ONG KONG — Stock prices surged 2.3 percent oo Monday as investors considered that the China-U.S. accord reached over the weekend averted a possible trade war. Hong Kong's big re-export business and facreasing role in the economic development of China stands to make it the big winner from the pact between its two biggest trading partners and the increasing likelihood that China will be allowed into the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, analysts said.

"This trade thing bas been a real stigma and that is oow behind is," said Stuart Gregory, an institutional sales broker at Morgan Grenfell (Asia). "Fundamentally our market is still cheap and geople want to invest in Asia and they want to invest in Chi-

Traders cauloned, bowever, that comments by Bill Clinton in the first U.S. presidential debate Sunday night may restrict any further advance. Mr. Clinton said be wanted future renewal of China's most-favored nation trading status to be tied to improvement in Beijing's human-rights record.

Concerns about a deterioration in relations between Britain and China over political reform in Hong Kong and the financing of the colony's airport project could prevent the index from rallying to 6,000 in the short term, traders said.

Hong Kong manufacturing companies with factories in southern China will be major beneficiaries of the China-U.S. pact, analysts said. This was reflected in sharp gains by manufacturing companies said. This was reflected in sharp gains by individuation of companies with operations in China. COLORADO SPRINGS. Colorado (Renters) - Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady said Monday that gross domestic product would gow in the third quarter, but probably not as much as President George Bash would like.

"It won't be as high as the president hopes for, but it will constitute the sixth quarter of growth," he said after addressing a business meeting has "Compared to what is going on around the world, that is better the Germany. That's better than Japan."

The consensus private forecast had been for growth of about $ percent, but many economists have recently lowered their estimates

Phar-Mor Loss Stings Westinghoused

PITTSBURGH (Bloomberg) -- Westinghouse Electric Corp., containing to suffer from losses at its financial unit, reported Monday a small profit of $14 million for the third quarter of the year.

profit of $14 million for the third quarter of the year. A $155 million pretax provision for losses at Westinghouse Financia Services Inc. counterbalanced a slightly higher operating profit of $25 million for Westinghouse's nonlinancial operations. Of that provision, $2 million related to the unit's investment in Phar-Mor Inc. a drug chair a million related to the unit's investment in Fnar-Morine, a fung chain the filed for court protection from creditors in Angust after disclosing the alleged fraud and embezzlement scheme by former managers. Still, Westinghouse Electric's result, on revenue of $3.04 billion represented an improvement from the comparable quarter of 1991, in that period, Westinghouse posted a $1.48 billion loss due to winedow of investments at the financial unit, ootably commercial real estate.

IBM Warns on Chemicals for Chips

ARMONK, New York (Combined Dispatches) — International Business Machines Corp. said Monday it had reduced the use of the chemicals used in the manufacturing of semiconductors after a start indicated that the chemicals may significantly increase the risk in miscarriages among women workers. IBM said it had cut the use of the chemicals, diethylene glycol dimen-ether and ethylene glycol monethyl ether acetate, by 40 percent from 19 to 1991.

The company said it had warned its workers and those of all other U semiconductor makers of the potential risk after a study it comm found that among 30 women who worked with the substances from 1980 to 1989 at IBM plants in Burlington, Vermoot, and East Fishkill, New York, and then became pregnant, 10 had miscarriages. Trafalgar House has already indicated a willingness to sell its hotel properties in an effort to release Of Freia value for stockholders.

Hongkong Land, for its part, said in a statement in Hong Kong that it considered its interest in Trafalgar House a "long-term strategic holding." Hongkong Land's intentions are "wbolly supportive" as long as it is "adequately represented on the board," it said,

One leading analyst in Hong Kong said Monday's developments were "hardiy very exciting," Laurence Zuckerman of the International Herald Tribune reponed. But the analysi, Peter Churchouse of Morgan Stanley Asia, added, "Now, if they bad some management control, that would or could be interesting."

Hongkong Land is cash rich and Mr. Churchouse said Trafalgar, with its high dividend yield, was an attractive place for the company to park its money, especially because of the stock's steep discount to net Freia

Volvo Weighs Closing Plants Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches

GOTEBORG, Sweden - Volvo AB said Monday that it would cut production of 1993 passenger car models by 5 percent and was considering closing its assembly plants at Kalmar and Uddevalla in Sweden.

The production cut of 12,000, which will reduce the year's output to between 215.000 and 220,000 cars, was necessary because the company had "substantial overcapacity." Volvo said. The company said even though it had increased its market share in its 17 most important markets, total car sales had fallen because the overall market for passenger cars is weak.

Volvo is involved in negotiations to knit closer ties with its French partner, Renault, and the two may eventually go as far as a merger. Lennart Jeansson, president of Volvo Car Corp., the carmaking unit of the truck and car producer, said an assessment of the two plants was being done in cooperation with labor union representalives. The assessment will be completed in November, when it will be put before Volvo Car's board for a final decision.

The Kaimar and Uddevalla plants employ a total of 1,630 people. Were those plants closed, production of cars in Sweden would be concentrated in the Torslanda plant in Goteborg. Volvo said. Volvo AB reported in August a first-balf loss of 103 million kronor ($18.5 million) after financial items, compared with a 1.16 billion kronor profit in the same period of 1991. The nine-month report is (Bloomberg, Reuters, AFP) due Nov. 19.

policy. Asked by one irate member of parliament if his resignation would not indeed be the "best service he could provide the British economy," Mr. Lamont simply replied: "No, I don't agree with that."

Under harsh questioning from members even of his own party, the chancellor also insisted that his credibility with the markets had not been damaged by recent reversals. His record, Mr. Lamont insisted, was one of continually "bearing down" on inflation in spite of immense pressure to change course.

He stressed that he would continue with that policy, explaining that he did not believe in "kick starting the economy. He specifically ruled out a strong shot of fiscal stimulus as something Britain could not now afford, "Policy is not designed to achieve a particular path of output," he said.

Just bow policy will be set remained as large a mystery at the close of the hearing as it had at its outset. Although he had set firm targets for inflation, Mr. Lamont said that inflation measures were of little indicators. "To guide policy, we have to look ahead," he said, pledging to keep track of a number of barometers including the price of assets such as houses and bonds.

use in guidiog policy because they are only lagging

He also repeatedly stressed that he was not prepared simply "to let the pound go" wherever it may. Mr. Lamont was forced to admit that the new policy he put in place following Britain's retreat from the European exchange-rate mechanism was in fact the same policy the country had before joining the mechanism two years ago. He justified the resurrected policy by saying that "in the 1980s we had a more successful performance on inflation than we had in the 1970s." Mr. Lamont said that "wed had no option but to withdraw" from the ERM last month after the pound had come under heavy speculative pressure.

He said Britain would return to the currency grid in due course but not until large differences in German and British monetary policy had narrowed.

In a press conference on Monday, Michael Heseltine, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, threw his weight behind Mr. Lamont.

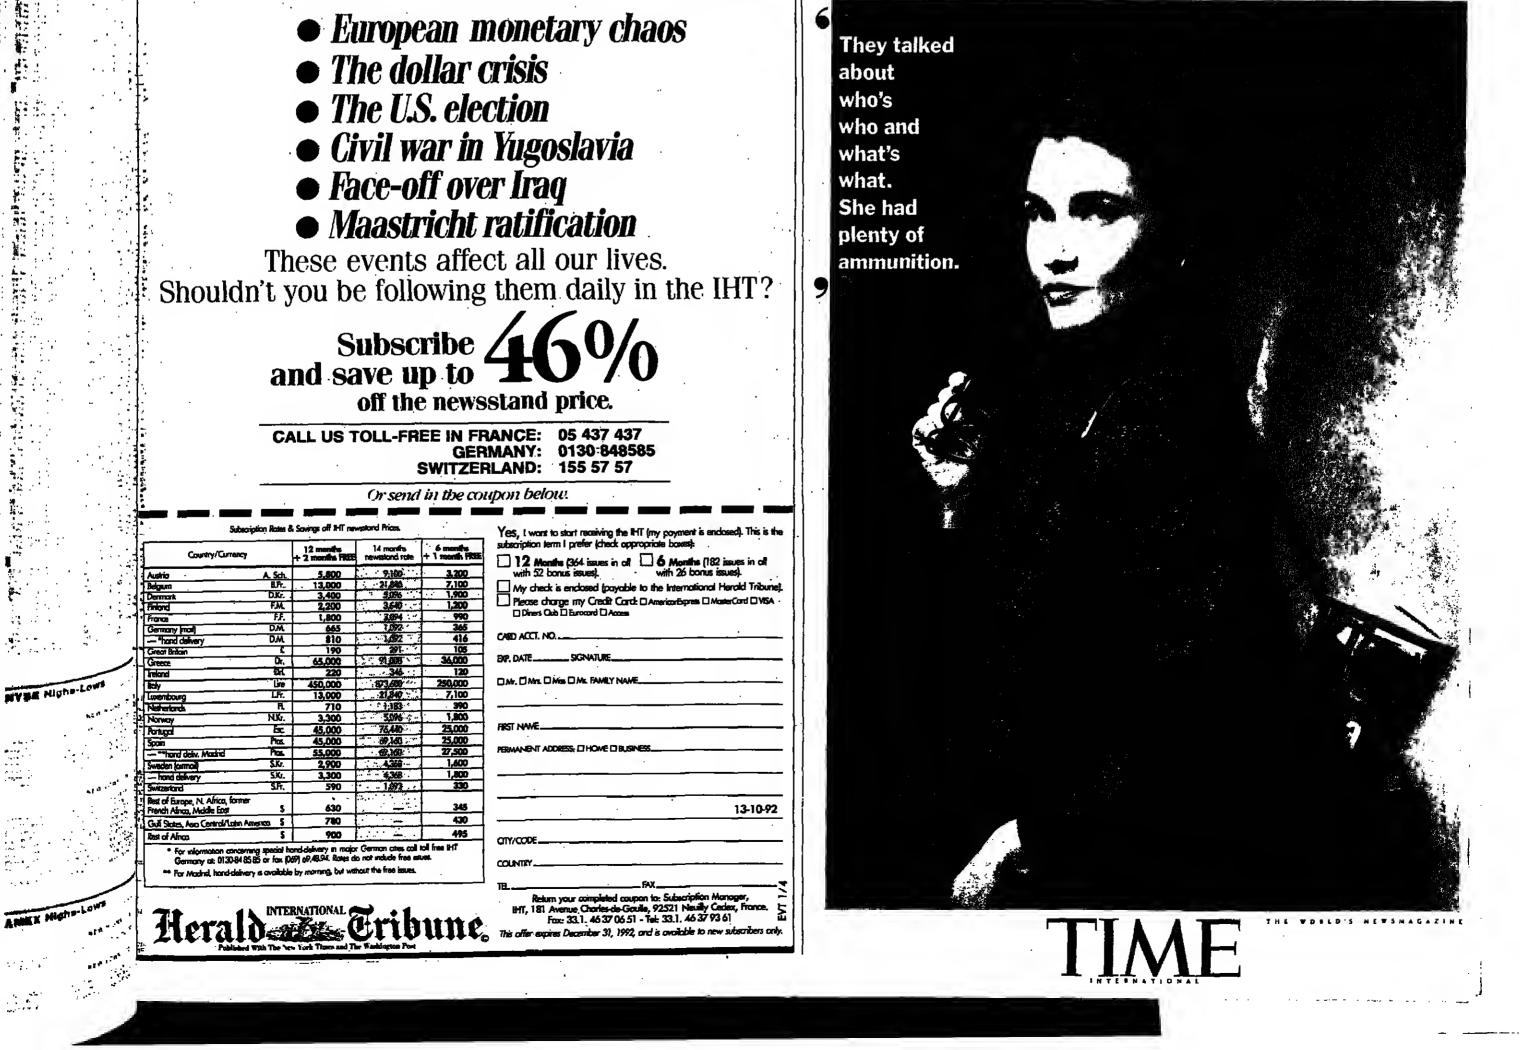

"There are no soft options," be said, arguing that it was unrealistic to expect Britain single-handedly to be able to solve economic problems that currently bedevil the entire industrialized world.

Capital Inflows Surge in Germany Reuters

FRANKFURT - A surge in German securities purchases by foreign investors caused the German capital account surplus to more than double in August, the Bundesbank said Monday.

The long-term capital account showed a net inflow of 9.5 billion DM ($6.4 hillion) in August, compared with a July inflow of 4.7 billion DM. The Bundesbank auributed the increase largely to investment in German securities but said that speculative flows of capital played a much larger role in September than in August. The currency crisis in September, for which full data are not yet available, triggered a rush into Deutsche mark-denominated paper.

HONG KONG -- World Trade enter Group Ltd. said Monday it ad agreed to sell the Hongkong lorid Trade Center to China's Resurceful River Ltd. for 2.5 billion long Kong dollars ($323 million). The sale of the shopping and of-ce complex in the Canseway Bay istrict would result in a net profit f about 650 million dollars for vorld Trade Center, said the comany's general manager, David Lee. The transaction would mark the econd recent sale of a major Hong long tower to Chinese interests. In May, Hongkong Land Holdags Ltd. sold a central-district nilding to a Chinese consortium or 3.8 billion dollars.

World Trade is a unit of Tomson acific Ltd., which is in Macau nagnate Stanley Ho's corporate table. The Hong Kong governnent last month opened investigaions into a number of transactions arried out by the two real estate and investment companies or their absidiaries since 1990. The sale is subject to shareholder approval and other, unspecified, conditions.

"The proceeds will be used to cepay debts, finance the company's various projects in China and for strategic investment in Hong Kong and southeast Asia," Mr. Lee said.

NEW YORK - Early last year, a new California magazine called Buzz was short of money and had to suspend publication, Two weeks later, a Thai businessman appeared and provided the astonished founders of Buzz with the money they needed. The man was Sondhi Limth-ongkul, chairman of the Manager Group of Bangkok, which includes more than 30 companies in Asia and Europe involved in publishing, printing, global advertising sales, information service and information technology.

Mr. Sondhi, 46, has ambition plans to become a major media figure on both sides of the Pacific. He is investing $10 million in Buzz Inc. to make it the centerpiece of his West Coast operations. He said he had already invested $3 million to $4 million in Buzz magazine itself. Now he wants to expand its parent company by acquiring new magazines in California that would be a good fit with his publishing enterprises in Asia. "I believe in across-the-ocean transactions," Mr. Sondhi said last week. "I am trying to create a publishing network in the Asia-Pacific region because I believe that is where growth lies and that is where you are going to make your money."

Mr. Sondhi is now the majority shareholder in Buzz maga-zine, with the three founders as minority shareholders. He also has a 25 percent stake in Globe Media of Los Angeles, which acts as an advertising sales representative for publications in the United States, Europe and Asia. His other U.S. property is

Australia Sales Data Show Weakness

CANBERRA - Retail sales inched up 0.1 percent in August from July, the government announced Monday, yet another sign that Australia's economic recovery is much weaker than expected.

In an attempt to help stave off a possible "double dip" recession, the authorities may move to cut interest rates before Christmas, economists said. Since January 1990, the authorities have cut the country's key interest rate 13 times, to 5.75 percent from 18 percent.

The retail sales figure comes in the wake of unemployment data last week that showed only a slight drop in the jobless rate, to 10.8 percent in' August from 10.9 percent in July.

Christopher Lehmann-Haupt N many respects, Edward O. Wilson's tidied up with 34 ... Rf6! 35 Re5 Rc6 36 c5 1 important new book, "The Diversity of Life," is a celebration of the miracle of evolution and the astonishing inventiveness of natural selection. You suspect he's building a case to show how little we know of the environment's complexity and how recklessly we are spending the abundance of nature's storehouse. Still, you want to concentrate on the wonders he unfolds. There's his description, for instance, of how spiders travel through the air by spinning out web filaments long enough to be picked up and carried by the wind like a balloon. But then about halfway through "The Diversity of Life," you come to a chart that traces the full geological history of life from four billion years ago to the present. At intervals along a horizontal line there appear little lightning bolis to designate when "biodiversity was sharply reduced by the great extinction spasms." There are six of these. The first, for example, appears 450 million years ago at the dividing line between the Ordovician Period and the Silurian. The fifth marks the cataclysmic end of the Age of Reptiles, about 65 million years ago. But here's the shocker: The last appears just to the right of zero years ago, or a few decades from oow. We are coming up on the sixth "major extinction spasm" in the history of life on Earth. The more you think about it, the more you realize that even the good news is bad. For instance, the good news is that the attraction of the good news is that the struggle to protect elephants or whales is not merely about saving these charismatic creatures hut rather about preserving the infinitely complex habitats of which such animals are only the most manifest glories. Moreover, the ethical dilemmas por-tended by this book are depressing, Where it comes to the conflicting needs of a starving Ecuadorean peasant and a rapidly diminishing rain forest, who in good conscience can ask the peasant to die for the sake of genetic diversity? As it turns out, this book does deliver much grim information. Wilson celebrates the complexity of evolution pre-cisely to emphasize the extent of the catastrophe we face. Yet be gives cause for hope, too. There is evidence that cosystems like the rain forests can be profitably used without harming them. As he concludes, "The race is on to develop methods, to draw more income from the wildlands without killing them, and so to give the invisible hand of free-market economics a green thumb." So despite the pessimism in "The Di-versity of Life," its virtue is not that it frightens but that it educates. It broadens our understanding of what Darwin re-vealed. It hints that even if humans weren't created by the hand of God, they. may yet prove to be a blessing on Earth.

Game 3. That kept the Pirates breathing. Then, this night, something truly strange took place. Not only did the Pirates crush Avery's bones, but superstar Barry Bonds returned.

"I always tell the players that I'll never single them out for criticism. We don't point fingers around here," said Leyland. "On the other hand, I can't cover up. If you're hitting .100, it's right there. What am 1 supposed to say?

If this proved to be free agent Bonds's last game in Three Rivers Stadium, then he got a send-off worthy of his dazzling career. From the moment of his firstinning double, on a hanging full-count slider with first base open, all boos were transformed into cheers.

Ever since Bonds was spotted 'house-hunting in Atlanta last week, there have been hard feelings here. On that front, Leyland has taken Bonds's part with true baseball eloquence: "If somebody offers them $10 million to go someplace else, I can't tell them to stay here because the Allegheny and Monongahela meet to form the Ohio."

The fortunes of playoff war take some weird twists. Before this game, many had practically begged Ley-land to start Wakefield, instead of journeyman Bob (Whirleybird) Walk, one of the game's least-heralded 92-67 pitchers. Even Leyland admitted, during o pregame drizzle, that if Game 5 were rained out, he'd think seriously about starting Wakefield - not Walk in the makeup game on Monday.

"I'm not going to start Wakefield on one day's rest, knuckleball or no knuckleball," said Leyland. "My God, if the Pittsburgh Pirates only have one pitcher who can win a game in the playoffs, then we got

Luckily for the Pirates, the rain stopped. Walk did the rest. After walking two men in the first inning, he took a one-hit shutout into the eighth. The only time he was close to giving up a run in the early going, Bonds saved him.

Before this 7-1 victory, the Pirates were generally thought to have about as much chance as Ross Perot. Afterward, too.

Now good news can travel even faster.

ART BUCHWALD Taking the Low Road

WASHINGTON - There aren't too many surprises in this presidential campaign. One that has shaken people is that President Bush has decided to take the low road and leave the high road to

Dan Quayle. I called up Roger Bomb, one of the president's top advisers. "What happened? Why Reden PARIS - Yehudi Menuhin will be named a "Goodwill Ambassador" of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on Wednesday, Unesco headquarters said.

The violinist, 76, is being honored "for his exceptional contribution to the objectives of Unesco ... in the fields of creativity, artistic education, peace and human rights or solidarity among nations," a Unesco spokeswoman said.

"But the sleaze isn't working," I said. "The polls still show him way down. "We won't know if it worked or not until Election Day. Who knows what the voters will do when they pull the lever? They will only have to ask. 'Do we want a strong, experienced president who has led this country through the greatest period of prosperity in its history? or, 'Do we want a president with oo experience who, as a student at George-town, sold U.S. nuclear secrets to the Kremlin?

"That's a tough choice for the voter," I admitted. "I assume Bush intends to take the low road for the rest of the campaign."

"He has to if he ever hopes to catch up. He lost so much ground when he was Mr. Nice Guy. The toughest thing I had to do is inform the vice president that he must give up the mud-slinging."

"He wasn't very good at it any-way. Every time he resorted to bashing the other side, the audience laughed.

"What are you going to do with him?

"Quayle's a good soldier and he will talk about God and country and how tough it was to go to public school."

This is a weird race. Bush seems to be madder at Bill Clinton than he is at Saddam Hussein." Why not? Saddam is not lead-

She is undefined, unencumbered, stripped down to the essence to talk about the new body of work she hopes to create and the battle she is waging to be able to accomplish it. For the 51-year-old actress, it is, perhaps, the fight of her life. After a nearly 30-year career that includes 38 films and 8 television movies. Dunaway has run headlong into the problem that will soon face Meryl Streep, Susan Sarandon, Anjelica Huston and an increasing number of actresses mov-ing into and through their 40s. As a female star grows older, the leading roles coming out of Hollywood simply disappear. Dunaway says she wants "to change the definitions of the same the target the definitions of the same as the same she wants the same she the definitions of a woman that are stultifying and limiting. Can we extend, as they do in Europe, the age of a leading lady? Can we not be stopped by age? Can we think there is allure? I don't know the answer yet. It's and interval, but I'd love to change it a little bit. A woman of 50 can be sensual and interesting and fabulous looking and at the top energy of her life." As one film executive, who knows Dunaway and asked not to be identified, puts it, "There is a lot of conflict between that part of her that wants to play leading ladies and the fact that those kinds of roles for women as they get older don't exist." It has been years since Dunaway has powered a major film, and that has been a bitter pill for an actress who thrives on complicated characters and the elixir of success. During the next several mooths

she will be appearing in three films that she hopes will begin to redefine her career and ultimately change the tone of her dialogue with Hollywood That work is what led her finally - three years ago - to move to the West Coast, after living her life anywhere but in Los Angeles. Along the way, she had developed a reputation for being a perfectionist, though some people called her impossible. I'm having to really challenge what people think of me," says Dunaway, who has most often played her characters with a cool inaccessibility and repressed passion. On this day she is definitely playing against type. Only moments earlier she had returned from taking her 12-year-old son, Liam, to school (her day to drive the car pool), and she is now worried that the steamed vegetables being served for hunch aren't perfect.

The industry assumes, she says, that she is an aging movie star now, and that translates into serving up crusty character roles. "I don't want to play overly strong women," she says. "I'm my most human. I'm my most undefended. But overly strong women are what I'm offered." The first of the three films she has pinned her hopes on, "Double Edge," proved an exception. The story - about a journalist's three-week confrontation with Arab-Israeli issues in Jerusaiem -also allowed her both a romantic involvement and a chance to play to the personal vulnerabilities of the character. The film got mixed reviews.

Dunaway retains a certain cachet. The whole notion of a star is someone who is bigger than life," says her friend and former attomey, Robert Levine, "Real movie stars bring to the screen a presence that's overwhelming. Faye is the last of that hreed." In reality, Dunaway may, in fact, be something else — a bridge between movie icons like Bette Davis, who were created and nurtured by the studio system of the 1940s and '50s, and the free-agent system that propels actresses like Demi Moore to the top these days. "I was really on the tail end of all that."

she says of the old studio star system. "Freddie Fields and David Begelman were my first agents. They had handled Judy Garland. I was their last hat trick." Fields and Begelman managed her career for nearly a decade. It began with "Hurry Sundown" and "Bonnie and Clyde" (both 1967) and ended with "Three Days of the Condor" (1975). Then Stan Kamen, one of William Morris's more powerful agents, took over her career. A number of films, including "Network," which earned her an Academy Award for best actress, "The Champ" and "Eyes of Laura Mars." followed. She stayed with the agency until the early 1980s, when her manic portrayal of Joan Crawford in "Mommie Dearest" cut so deeply into Hollywood's veneer that she found herself ostracized. She disappeared to England and mar-ried a photographer, Terry O'Neill. "On the eve of the '80s." she says. "I had a marriage I hoped would work, and my child. My focus was not on my work." There were movies - embarrassments like "Supergirl," "Ordeal of Innocence" and "The Wicked Lady" — that Dunaway says she would not have done had she been concentrating on her career, and the mar-riage ended in divorce.

"It was a period when I just stopped the music," she says.

In the late 1980s, when she tried to restart the music, she found that Hollywood had changed and she had grown older. So she has begun to fight back. Against Hollywood conventions. Against time.

Her experience with the recent flop "Man Trouble." which stars Jack Nicholson, illustrates her frustrations. There were two female roles. Nicholson's love interest - the starring female role - was ultimately played by Ellen Barkin, while Beverly D'Angelo woo the supporting role as his sister. Before the parts were cast, there were discussions with Dunaway about being in the film.

"It was suggested to me that I consider doing the sister." she says. "That was in-sulting. It's not acceptable to me to play Jack's sister, when I was Mrs. Mulwray to his Gittes in 'Chinatown.' I was the girl.' "The Temp" is the second of Dunaway's three new films. It is a thriller due in January and co-stars Timothy Hutton and Lara Flynn Boyle. Dunaway plays a glossy chief executive who finds herself confronting a secretary who will kill for her boss, literally

And in the Yugoslav director Emir Kusturi-ca's "American Dreamers," also due early next year, she plays the older love interest of Johnny Depp. It is with the Kusturica film that she believes she has the greatest chance to hreathe new life into her career. "The role was there," she says. "This wonderful, idiosyncratic woman who is flawed and funny. And I had great col-leagues. Hopefully it's the best work I've done. Certainly it's the best opportunity Tve had." Kusturica considered a number of acpresses but says he found in Dunaway someone who could hlend the childlike elements he was looking for even as she was approaching 50. "The role shows a very wide scale of what she is able to do as a serious actress and as a mature person." he says, "With it, I believe she is opening a oew page in her life."
